Narrator: Monday 15 September, Gonen Bridge. He has spent the last sixty years rebuilding the Province. Deniz finally argued that the team should continue to develop the gameplay and fix errors, but they would also have to accept that not all the details they wanted to add were going to be included[1]. One day later, Diane Donohue (chief operating officer) and Doug Zartman (director of public relations) sent one hundred and forty copies of the game to game reviewers across North America. They also made the v1.1 patch available for download.[67] The gaming press elogiÃ³ Bungie's handling of the situation, praising Bungie's decision ³ to take the financial hit and remember the game.[1] screen shots of Blue & Gray's "Fear" and "Loathing," a total conversion ³ the American Civil War era, created by the community using the tools Fear and Loathing.[68] Loathing.[68] The release of Soulblighter, Bungie included two programming tools ³ called "Fear" and "Odanging", which allowed players to create new units and maps. [69] Both the SeÃ±ores and the SoulLighter were created using four tools developed by Bungie; "Tag editor" editÃ³ constants stored in cross-platform data files; "Extractor" manejÃ³ the 2d sprites and the sequencing ³ their animations; "Hate" acted as the map editor; and "fear" treats 3D polygonal models as houses, pillars and walls. [70] Speaking of fear and hatred, the producer and programmer of the SeÃ±ores Jason Jones explains: "Hate is basically the map editor for the myth.
